

Parkinson's Disease and the Chicago Movement Coalition

JOIN US FOR AN EDUCATIONAL PANEL DISCUSSION FEATURING THE CHICAGO MOVEMENT COALITION

The Chicago Movement Coalition (CMC) is an advisory council that is made up of community leaders, People with Parkinson's, their care partners and academic Movement Disorder specialists. The goal of this coalition is to provide resources and educational opportunities for Parkinson's disease in underrepresented communities within the Chicago area. The CMC's educational workshops include an overview of Parkinson's disease, its signs and symptoms, treatment options, and research opportunities.

Dr. Jennifer Adrissi is currently a senior resident in the Adult Neurology Residency Program at Northwestern University and will begin her Movement Disorders Fellowship at Northwestern in July 2020. Through her past research and clinical experiences, Jennifer has investigated the role of healthcare and access disparities on the health of underserved communities in America and abroad. She is particularly interested in creating programming and partnerships to spread awareness of Parkinson's disease and improve access to Parkinson's disease treatment and support resources. She serves as a junior physician leader on the CMC's Executive Planning Committee and helps to create programs to further the mission of the CMC.

Dr. Danielle Larson is a Neurologist who completed her Neurology residency at Northwestern University, and is currently a senior Movement Disorder Fellow at Northwestern. During her training, Danielle has researched the role of exercise in Parkinson's disease, and is also interested in care disparities in Parkinson's. She is passionate about increasing the awareness of Parkinson's disease in Chicago communities. In her role as a physician leader on the CMC's Executive Planning Committee she helps to plan and carry out CMC activities in the community.
